

HAMPDEN'S MONUMENT UNVEILED

The next toast was, as Lord Nugent said, that of a gentleman, a friend of his, a staunch friend of liberty, and through whose veins circulates Hampden blood, "Dr. Lee." Drank three times three, and one more.

Dr. Lee, in returning thanks, said it was highly gratifying to him that his name should be mentioned in a meeting like the present-and gratifying that it should be associated with this undertaking (cheers). He had only to say of himself that he was but a country gentleman-but deemed it an honour as well as his duty to do what he could in support of civil and religious liberty (cheers). He was proud that his name was associated on that column with the name of the Marquis of Breadalbane; for when I think of what he is doing for the public good in England and Scotland, I feel justly proud at having my name associated with his (cheers).

The chairman next gave the health of the Rev. Dr. Twisleton, Canon Residentiary of Hereford-a gentleman descended from a noble stock, and descended from a noble father, who honours the cause of public liberty, and adorns that cause by the sacredness of his office and the purity of his character. Drank with animation.

The Rev. Dr. Twisleton briefly returned thanks. After this the company broke up, much delighted with the ceremony and conviviality of the day.

At the dinner we observed, besides the noble chairman Lord Nugent, Sir J. Easthope, M. P., W. H. Tancred, Esq. M. P., Rev. Dr. Hampden, Rev. Dr. Twisleton of Hereford, Dr Lee, Sir Saml. Hancock, Lowndes Stone, Esq., C. S. Ricketts, Esq., Rev. T. Hayton, J. Lloyd, Esq, and many other gentlemen, whose names we could not learn, and several members of the University and numbers of county gentry around. But we must not forget to mention that the dinner was graced by the presence of Lady Nugent, Mrs. and Miss Hampden, Miss Stone, &c.
